As you read it, time yourself carefully and note down the exact number of seconds you take. Then divide the number of words by the number of seconds you took, and multiply this by sixty: $500/\text{sec} \times 60 = \text{words}/\text{min}$. If, for example, it took you 136 seconds, then your reading rate is 220 words per minute.

Exams were my weak point at university. We've all been there, when exam time comes you spend more time trying to learn things, rather than revise stuff you already knew. I believe the key to exams isn't what you know, but what you can remember. I'm in no doubt this book got me a 2:1 and subsequently 3 brilliant jobs since I graduated.
